Comparative Analysis

The two projects I decided to research were the major picker quiz for Marquette University and the Academic Advisor Training website for University of Fairbanks Alaska. I selected these two websites because my project is going to follow a quiz format, but the purpose is ultimately to educate students about how they should approach class selection from an advising standpoint as well as provide answers to the most common question I get asked, which is “what classes should I take?”

Major Selection Quiz II Marquette University

I liked the quiz format they selected. However, there's no way to change your answers once they are submitted, which I think would be a useful tool because filling out the questions is a time intensive process, and it's nice to be able to see how changing one answer might affect the final outcome. Additionally, the image didn't change or move at all, which could have made filling out the forms a more dynamic experience. I think that the addition of sound was nice, although potential annoying.

Academic Advisor Training II University of Fairbanks, Alaska

Although I liked that the "training" was done in steps and you could easily edit the chapters, I hated the aesthetics of this site. However, the navigation was clear and clean, if fairly non-interactive.
